INTRODUCTION AND ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book is intended to be a companion volume to my earlier book The Stayers, which focussed on the pre-World War I Dalmatian immigrants who stayed and settled in New Zealand. It investigates the Transients, those who came intending to return to Dalmatia. In the context of this book, "Dalmatian" includes Croatians from the coast of Istria and its associated islands, whose motives in coming to New Zealand and homeland culture were the same as for Dalmatians from South Central Dalmatia.

The numbers of Transients far outnumbered the Stayers. Of about 5,600 known arrivals between 1892 and 1914, less than 2,000 were still resident in New Zealand in 1916. Of those in New Zealand in 1916, it is likely that about a third had arrived as Transients, and had been trapped by the advent of World War I. Many of these returned to Dalmatia by 1921.

Although the focus is on Transients, the two immigrant streams interact and there will be some repetition of the narrative and data of The Stayers to deliver a complete picture of the Transients.

I would like to thank Stephen Jelicich, Fred Matich, Dick Martinovich, Andrew Trlin, Ilija Sutalo and the staff of New Zealand Archives, the Kauri Museum and the Auckland City Library for help in preparing this paper.

The digitised records of passenger lists from the Family Search website and the digitised "Shipping" information from the New Zealand Herald provided material that was absolutely vital to research for the book.

PREAMBLE

The Transients was conceived as a companion book to my earlier book The Stayers which dealt with pre-World War I Dalmatian arrivals who settled in New Zealand. The intention was to go back to the earliest gum-digging Dalmatians, showing how they had become expert at mining gum, how they had earned money to return or support their families in Dalmatia, how they formed a starting point for the Stayers and how those who were trapped in New Zealand by the war extracted themselves from their unexpected long stay.

Apart from a rapid increase in numbers from 1896 to 1901, the figures in the 5-yearly censuses appeared to give a reasonably steady inflow and outflow of Dalmatians. But the passenger lists for vessels between Sydney and Auckland are now available in digitised form, and when they are analysed they show huge annual swings in the number of arrivals, from over 770 in 1898 to zero in 1901.

What were the reasons for these variations, which obviously affected Dalmatian immigration patterns for both Transients and Stayers?

Reasons suggested for Dalmatian immigration were:

- the repressive and negligent Austrian government of Dalmatia
- general poverty
- · population increase and land shortage
- phylloxera grape vine disease
- imports of cheap Italian wine into Austro-Hungary

- ability to make money digging kauri gum
- · avoidance of military service

The first three were causes that were ongoing throughout the period of this study. As late as December 1910, Dr Josip Smodlaka, member for Split in the Austrian parliament cited the Dalmatian condition on the first two¹:

"Potatoes in Dalmatia are a luxury, they are only eaten by the better classes."

"But we not only have no bread, but no drinking water; out of 600 Dalmatian villages more than half have none."

"In the richest constituency . . . there are 48 villages of which 28 have no school."

"In half the country the number of illiterates is not 50 or 60, not 80 or 90 per cent but 99 and 100 per cent."

The population of Dalmatia increased dramatically over the period from 527,000 in 1890 to 625,000 in 1914 despite the huge numbers emigrating.²

The issues raised in the last 4 bullet points did have variable effects on emigration to New Zealand. Furthermore, the reaction by New Zealand authorities to some of the surges in numbers resulted in temporary sharp declines in arrivals. The narrative section of this book will attempt to demonstrate the effects of the variable reasons.

Finally, it has been suggested that the very early Dalmatian immigrants to New Zealand had a major input starting the immigration of large numbers, particularly to the gumfields. Andrew Trlin has recorded the lives of about 80 early "Pioneers", but it appears that, with the notable exceptions of Paul Lupis and Mariano Vella, only a few of them had any direct involvement in migration to the gumfields.

Most of the Pioneers who settled in gumfield areas came from northern coastal Dalmatia, and the only recognisable names of later arrivals from this group are Beanovich (in 1894), Carina (in 1897 and 1913), Blasch (in 1913), and Gasparich (in 1912 and 1913). Later Sarich arrivals came from Tucepi, Rascane and Zupa, so presumably were not related to the pioneer, Antonio Sarich. Lupis and Vella are discussed in Section 4 of this book.

1. Arrivals from Istria and Other Northern Coasts

The east coast of Istria, source of most Croatians who came from northern regions to dig gum. Rijeka was known as Fiume at the time of their emigration to New Zealand. Others came from islands such as Losinj, part of which shows in the lower right hand corner, and some from coastal western Istria. However, most of the immigrants from this area give Novi Vinodol as their place of origin.

In From Distant Villages, Stephen Jelicich has translated comments from Ivan Kabalin in 1948 regarding the start of immigration to the kauri gumfields by Croatians from the Istrian coast and islands. The item is worth reproducing in full as it gives valuable insights into these early times:

"I am 71 years of age and have been in the Paeroa area for 28 years. I first arrived in New Zealand as a lad of 18 in June 1896 and went gumdigging for five years around Dargaville. The first men who came here from Novi Vinodol were Anton Sokolich and Ivan Maricich who heard about the country while working near Melbourne. They arrived in 1885. Soon after a group of 26 from Australia followed them. I would say that between 50-60 from Novi were here - 30 working for Mitchelson at Flaxmill and Babylon camps, the rest scattered around Kaikohe and Poroti. There was a group of about 50 from Hreljin about 25km to the north of Novi. These two groups were from the Croatian Littoral - the rest came from Central Dalmatia and the islands.

We came of necessity, not from choice, from our poor coastal lands. I once had 1500 vines. Phylloxera wiped out the lot. Without an income it was impossible to replant so we sought work elsewhere in the world. By nature Novjani are not fishermen or mariners, therefore the men of Crikvenica fished our rich grounds and sold to us, but there was little money, so we left our homes and families"

A number of points in this statement need comment. Phylloxera is an infestation of the roots of grape vines that originated from grape plants in North America. The infestation was spread somehow to Europe in the mid-19th century and had a devastating effect on the European wine industry. By 1890 the French had established that the only effective response to an infestation of phylloxera was to dig out existing vines and replace them with wine grape varieties grafted on to resistant American rootstock.⁵ In France the cost of doing this and maintaining the vineyard until the first picking at 4 years was 3,200-4,200 francs (£128-£168) per hectare.⁶ Once replanted, the new vines took about 7 years to reach the production levels of the vines prior to infestation.

The owners of vineyards infested with phylloxera had two choices: to fund the replanting and running costs until vines were productive enough to sustain them; or to go out of the winemaking business. (In France 30% of vineyards had been abandoned by 1896.⁷) There was little opportunity to earn enough money in Istria or Dalmatia to provide the necessary support, so temporary immigration to richer countries was seen as the best way to provide the needed funds.

Phylloxera's first impact was on Western Europe's vineyards cutting wine production dramatically. Istria and Dalmatia initially benefitted from the shortfall, and production and exports of wine from these areas were boosted. By 1890 phylloxera had made its way east and had attacked 15,000 hectares out of a total of 60,000 hectares of vineyards in the Austrian provinces of Styria, Carniola and Istria.8 The same report states that "in Dalmatia where the culture of the vine is largest, the devastating insect has not vet shown itself'. So this is consistent with Kabalin's statement that phylloxera was the reason for high emigration from the Istrian littoral in the early 1890s.

Kabalin's statement also strongly supports the concept that from the first, the Dalmatian gumdiggers acted as groups, in contrast to the typical "British" individual digger. The 1893 Report of the Kauri Gum Industry Inquiry Commission notes that to extract the maximum gum it has to be dug on a "systematic manner, paddocking out the ground" and "beneath the surface gum . . . in many of the known swamps there exist a much larger quantity of gum than has ever been taken out of them", and "it cannot be got at . . . in any way but by drainage of the swamps". These considerations could not be addressed by gumdiggers who individually but could be by the collective approach offered by "Austrian" diggers.

As a third point, the northern arrivals based themselves largely at Dargaville. The 1893 Report of the Kauri Gum Industry Inquiry Commission gives the total number of "Austrian" gumdiggers as 452 at the time evidence was taken, but in Richard Mitchelson's evidence to the Commission he states that there were 267 "Austrians" on the Mitchelson's land at Dargaville alone.

The passenger lists between Sydney and Auckland in Appendix 3 start in 1892. Of the recognisable names in 1892, 31 out of 47 came from Novi and other Istrian areas. The numbers increased in the surge of 1896 and 1897 but the area was never again a significant part of the stream of immigrants. The totals shown in Table 1 record about 300 recognisable names from the area out about 3,700 Dalmatian arrivals whose names were recognisable.

Furthermore of about 230 recognisable names who arrived before 1910 only 25 are recorded in New Zealand in 1916 (see Appendix 1). This ratio of 1 stayer out of 9 arrivals indicates that most northerners were transient immigrants seeking to earn money and return home.

The families of the two men who started the Novi gumdigging exodus to New Zealand arrived in some numbers, 44 Sokolichs and 12 Maricics among the recognisable names. Other families well represented were Pericic, 11, Baran, 15, Piskulich, 18, and Deranja, 10, with recognisable arrival names. There were some 28 Jovanovich arrivals, but some may not have come from Novi.

That the Novi emigrants to New Zealand were Transients is borne out by the pre-1916 naturalization figures. Of the 138 men mentioned in the previous paragraph, only 4 had become naturalized by 1916 (although some who were trapped by the outbreak of war later settled in New Zealand). Of 35 who were in New Zealand in 1916, only 2 had been in New Zealand for more than 6 years.

⁹ Reported in the New Zealand Herald, 8/9/1893, p.3

2. An Early Wave of Arrivals

Central Dalmatia, the source of most Dalmatian emigrants to New Zealand, particularly of those who settled in New Zealand.

1892 Istrian and Dalmatian winegrowers were dealt an additional blow. A consequence of the eastward spread of phylloxera was that Austria could no longer produce all the wine it consumed and had changed from a net exporter of wine to a net importer of wine in 189110. In 1892 Italy was persuaded by Austria and Germany to join their defensive military alliance. Part of the "persuasion" was that Italian wine could imported into Austria on favourable terms¹¹ undercutting Dalmatian wine producers. The average price of Dalmatian wine halved between 1892 and 1894 (see Table 7). This meant that in winegrowing areas wine selling price was cut, as was the value of all maturing wine stocks.

In 1893 the number of Dalmatian arrivals increased sharply from about 70 in 1892 to over 300. The names in the passenger lists are poorly recorded for this year, with only about half the Dalmatian names being decipherable. Nonetheless it is clear that the Korcula/Peljesac area was by far the dominant source of arrivals in 1893 with contributions from Novi, Hvar and the south coast of the mainland from Igrane to Ploce.

¹⁰ Ordish, p.171

¹¹ Trlin, p.15

Paul Lupis from Nakovan in the Peljesac had arrived in New Zealand in 1866¹² and others of that name from the Peliesac. Florius (arrived 1879) and John (arrived 1883) would have been the core of a chain migration from that area. Paul made a number of trips to New Zealand and his story is told in some detail by Stephen Jelicich in "From Distant Villages". 13 Nicholas Sentch giving evidence to the Royal Commission on Kauri Gum in 1898, recounted:

"there is a person out here of the name of Paul Lopez (I am speaking of 18 years ago); he was digging gum at Dargaville and made a little money. He went home to Austria, got married there, and brought his wife back with him, and also some of his relatives, and since then it seems to me, by him giving them the idea that money could be made in the country from gumdigging, they have been advancing money to each other to come out". 14

This account would fit well with the recognisable names of arrivals in 1892, with Batistich from Lumbarda; Belic, Cebalo, Tvrdeic and Curac from Zrnovo; Seput, Barach and Covacic from Trpanj and Stuk, Bogdan, and Muzin from elsewhere on the Peljesac or Korcula.

But a nearly 5-fold increase in the annual arrival rate in 1893 seems out of step with normal chain migration, so presumably there was another cause for this sudden increase. Family names that started to appear in 1893 were Jelicich, Petricevich, Bartulovich, Kumarich and Bulat from Hvar; Farac, Bilis, Mazuran, Pausina, Salle, Posa, Bakaric, Unkovich and Botica from Korcula and Peljesac; Talijancic and Kosovich from the coast south of Igrane; Sulenta as one of a few arrivals from north of Igrane; and Tolich, Begovich and Grljusich from the small number from the inland area.

Family names of those who were major sources of arrivals to 1914 were, Batistich, 20; Belich, 26; Botica, 40; Cebalo, 26; Curac, 20; Farac, 41; Salle, 30; Segedin, 30 and Unkovich, 40. [Lupis is considered to be a special case of a committed settler family.]

Of the 273 men in these families, only 31 who had arrived in New Zealand before 1910 were still in New Zealand and only 45 had become naturalised by 1916. So essentially the members of these families were Transients, although families such as the Boticas and Unkovichs were moving more towards settling prior to World War I.

Ages of immigrants were given on a few ships for the first time in 1893. Of the recognisable Dalmatians with recorded names, the average age was over 30, and there were none under the age of 21. This makes fear of conscription unlikely as a driver for this increase in immigration.

¹² Trlin, table 2.4

¹³ Jelicich, p. 35,36

¹⁴ Jelicich, p 34

A likely booster to arrival numbers in 1893 was the price of gum. According to the 1898 Commission¹⁵, prices for gum had risen from a range of £33 to £46 in 1889 to £46-10 to £73-10 in 1892. The shine went off this in 1894-5 with the prices in the latter year ranging from £39 to £54. If, as seems likely, most arrivals went to the Hobson County area, they would have struggled in an area that had been worked over for many years unless they were able to link up with experienced groups. With the number of Dalmatians doubling on the gumfields in one year it is likely that many were unable to do this and moved to new gumfields in the North.

In 1893 New Zealand was still in the grip of a long depression. Settlers of Hobson County were struggling to make ends meet and supplemented their income by digging gum. Unemployed from Auckland and even the South Island had found their way to Hobson County to make a living gumdigging. It is not surprising that a large influx of new gumdiggers would cause a reaction. The reaction would also have been influenced by the greater returns of the Dalmatian co-operative working methods.

Protests against Dalmatian diggers started in May 1893¹⁶ at which time there would have been less than 300 Dalmatians in the field. This would be far less than 10% of the total number of gumdiggers found by the 1893 Commission.¹⁷ There is no doubt that the protests were fuelled by wild rumours of Dalmatian numbers both in New Zealand and on the way. In a letter to the New Zealand Herald in May 1893, Charles Hardy offered the following,

"There is indisputable evidence that they number at least 800 able bodied men; and moreover we are assured by no mean authority that there are 5,000 others either on the way or about immediately to start for this country" and,

"In the event of that slender thread being broken by which hangs the peace of Europe, an inevitable collapse of the gum trade would certainly immediately ensue. In which event, besides the thousands of colonists on the gumfields who would have to be provided for by the Government or by private benevolence, there would be thousands of famishing Austrians roaming through the country like hungry wolves..." 18

Furthermore it was an election year and candidates allied to J.M. Dargaville attempted to make political capital from it.

No fewer than 7 petitions were presented to Parliament¹⁹ and a Private Members Bill, The Gum and Gumfields Bill 1893²⁰ was put forward in Parliament. The Excerpt from an Advertisement in the "Observer" on October 16 1893, for Liberal Party candidates for the 1893 Parliamentary Elections. The anti-Austrian approach was a campaign ploy, but did not result in the Liberal candidates securing any seats]

The Commission reported to Parliament that the fears on immigration were exaggerated:

"In thus casting about for evidence, it has been a necessary consequence that we have tried to elicit information where none of any value could be obtained; that a great many things were said which were perhaps hardly worth saying; and a great many more which were only worth saying once have been many times repeated" and recommended certain steps to be taken. ²¹

In the event, the Gum and Gumfields Bill was not enacted and the recommendations of the Commission were ignored.

While there is ample evidence of support for Austrian immigrants in the press, in parliament and by supportive letter writers, it is likely that some resentment remained, particularly with the gumdiggers in the Hobson County.

Away from Hobson County considerable support for the Dalmatians was expressed by newspapers and individuals. The only serious objection raised was that they did not settle in New Zealand but returned to Dalmatia with their earnings. The solution seen to this was to encourage them to settle in the country as desirable immigrants. Two editorials by the New Zealand Herald sum this up.²²

For instance the New Zealand Herald editorial of May 19, 1893 said:

"Those who know them say that they are very frugal and abstemious till they earn money and then live as well as others. They make it a rule, however never to go into debt, and that in New Zealand renders them objects of pity and contempt. These Austrians could readily assimilate with our population, and would make excellent settlers."

and on June 8, 1893, after referring to Belgian and Gaelic speaking settlers:

"Why should we not have a settlement where Croatian is the prevailing tongue? Several of the Austrians have settled, and we believe that if the Government were to do its duty afford them the facilities to go on the land, the majority of them would take advantage of these and leave the gumfields forever. They have been bred to agricultural labour, they are accustomed to cultivation of the vine, and to other crops which would succeed in the North. We would be delighted to see them cleared off the gumfields and made permanent settlers of."

The Dalmatians also had influential friends in the form of landowners, such as the Mitchelson brothers, who wished to have drained cultivable land once the kauri gum had been extracted. The owners were starting to realise that restoring potholed land was expensive and to insist that digging be done on a "full face" method. For "full face" mining, the whole area was progressively excavated taking out all the gum (see photo below). This had the advantages for the landowner of leaving the area level, removing buried timber and where there was a clay pan below the surface the excavation broke up the pan and enhanced the land quality. In addition, many landowners realised that gumbearing swampy areas were potentially fertile, so deals were struck to exchange digging rights for drainage of swamps.²³

Dalmatian collectives were the only organisations who could offer this service, and evidence to the 1898 Commission of Enquiry showed that they established themselves in this field.

However, not all Dalmatians worked in the collective groups and even when they did there were times when they were unable to work on their collective project. For instance, some swamp drainage work could not be carried out in winter. In these cases the Dalmatians would become direct competitors with the "British" diggers.

Whether it was because of bad local feeling or whether there were better prospects elsewhere by 1896, there were more Dalmatians in the four Northern counties than in Hobson County (see table 5).

Overall Dalmatian wine production was still very high in 1893 and 1894 (see table 7) and arrivals dropped back to 21 and 74 in 1894 and 1895 respectively.

²³ The 1898 Report, pp. 22, 24, 26

3. The First Surge of Arrivals from Central South Dalmatia

Central South Dalmatia is the source of most Dalmatian immigration to New Zealand. The core of this area is the islands of Hvar, Korcula and Vis, the Peljesac peninsula and the Makarska coast. Wine production was the dominant occupation. The total area of vineyards in this core in 1894 was 16,000 ha (see table 7), about half the area of New Zealand vineyards in 2013. Fringing this core were Brac, Vrgorac and Metkovic which had combined plantings of 12,000 ha and contributed to arrivals, generally at later dates than the core.

In 1894, 1895 and the first half of 1896 the rate of arrivals dropped from the numbers who arrived in 1893, and stabilised at the rate of about 70 per annum. Despite the lower prices a record wine production volume in Dalmatia for 1893 and high volumes in 1894-6 probably reduced emigration pressures (see table 7). The arrivals were sourced from the same areas as previous arrivals. Unsurprisingly, family names of earlier arrivals occur frequently.

From the middle of 1896 arrivals increased dramatically (see table 4) with about 221 arrivals in the last 6 months of 1896, 370 in 1897 and 750 in 1898, a total of 1340 in two and a half years. This represents about 23% of the total arrivals over 22 years.

Ages were given more frequently in this period than in previous years. Of the 350 recorded ages, 25 were in the range 15-21, with a further 11 boys under 15. It would seem from this that fear of conscription was not a substantial factor in the rise in arrivals.

After dropping to a low in 1894 the price of kauri gum rose to about the 1893 high price for 1896 and 1897²⁴. Furthermore, ample gum was available to be won. Gumfields had developed in Mangonui, Hokianga, Bay of Islands and Whangarei Counties by 1896 (see Table 5) and production of gum increased from 7,100 tons in 1896 to 9,900 tons in 1898 while maintaining its high price (see Table 4).

During this period Istrian and Dalmatian gumdiggers had gained an understanding of kauri gum's distribution within gumfields and had improved their ability to mine gum efficiently. Their collective mining approach allowed them to dig deeper potholes than individuals or small groups where this was appropriate. However, their favoured method of collective mining was to dig on a face to depths well outside the reach "British" diggers.

Private landowners had already shown that they preferred their land to be dug on a face. This method recovered all the gum whereas potholing recovered 50% or less. On land with farming potential digging on a face meant that the land was drained, buried timber removed, clay pans broken up and the ground surface left ready for cultivation.

²⁴ The 1898 Report, p.15

An example of shallow face digging showing the dug over land left, which was clear of buried timber and suitable for conversion to pasture. Courtesy of "The Kauri Museum", Matakohe, A.1992.915.201]

Once started, the face digging of an area of land had to be carried on to completion, so the gumdigging group had to have the experience to assess whether a field had sufficient gum to merit excavation. If new arrivals joined an experienced group (and it seems likely that this was often prearranged within families or villages) they would probably earn good money from digging. If they were unable to join an experienced group they would struggle initially on the same footing as "British" diggers. When arrival numbers were very high many must have had to scrabble a living for "tucker".

Even more experience was required where an agreement with a landowner required a swamp to be drained before gumdigging could start. The digging group had to assess whether there was sufficient gum in the swamp to make it worthwhile and this assessment had to take into account the weeks of unpaid work draining the swamp before mining could start.

Arrangements between diggers and owners could be substantial. In submissions to the 1898 Commission Antonio Falconetti stated:

"I left Parengarenga to join the party here to drain and work Harding's swamp. Our arrangement with Mr Harding is to this effect: We pay him only half royalty - that is 5s. per quarter per man instead of 10s. which other diggers have to pay to work on any part of the lease; in return for this he will have his swamp drained. Under this arrangement we have the right to dig gum on the swamp for ten years We are working on the co-operative principle. There twelve married men and eight single men in our party."

Some of these projects were quite large. The Mitchelsons mention two projects in their submissions to the 1898 Commission by referring to earlier completed drainage projects.

"Drain at Long Gully, being dug by Austrians, a mile and a half, consisting of cross drains; area of swamp. One mile long by 800 yards wide; depth of drain, 8 feet; width of drain at top 10 ft; at bottom, about 6 feet; number of men in party, 22. Drain at Flax Mill swamp, about a mile and a half long; area of swamp, same as above. Drain about 5ft. by 4 ft. by 2 ft., running smaller at the top of the swamp.

These swamps are given over to those who are draining them for the term of our lease, subject to the usual conditions, we to protect them from other diggers not being of the party. The number of men in this party is twenty."

The cover photo possibly shows the latter under construction.

By the end of 1897 submissions to the Kauri Gum Industry Commission noted that 6 major swamp drainage projects were under way or had been completed.

All of this points to collective groups that were very professional in their approach to mining gum and were capable of negotiating agreements with landowners for rights to mine gum over a period of years.

While the gumdigging industry in New Zealand was buoyant and many in Dalmatia had connections with successful gumdiggers, this buoyancy cannot have been the reason for the huge surge in arrivals in 1897 and 1898. It is likely that it was responsible for the increase numbers from Istria where phylloxera had already taken its toll.

Phylloxera spread slowly down the Dalmatian coast but did not have a significant effect on wine growing in south Central Dalmatia until about 1910. ²⁵ While phylloxera was the ultimate vineyard destroyer, annual vintages could be devastated by the fungus grape disease, rust. ²⁶ This occurred in 1897 and 1898. Average wine production for Dalmatia from 1885 to 1894 was 1,270,000 hectolitres per annum. Production collapsed to an average of 850,000 hectolitres in 1897 and 1898 (see Table 7) largely due to attacks of rust. This dramatic reduction, coupled with the reduced wine prices had a devastating effect on Dalmatian areas dependent on wine production.

Over the period 1896 to 1898 recording of passenger names was poor. Manuscript names in lists were often hard to decipher and it became fairly regular for one of the two lists for any voyage merely to note "53 Austrians" or similar, making it impossible to use one list to check the other. To be fair to the shipping companies, there was no requirement until 1899 for migrants to have had even basic literacy skills. Schooling in Dalmatia was poor and many Dalmatian arrivals at this time were illiterate. For these reasons, only about half the names of arrivals were clear enough to be recorded in Appendix 3. This in turn meant that the origins of less than half of arrivals could be ascertained.

Of those whose origin could be ascertained, there were strong contributions from Novi, the Peljesac and Korcula and the coast south of Igrane; a build-up in numbers from Hvar and the coast from Drasnice north in 1897 and 1898; and some numbers coming from inland in 1898 (see Table 1).

Family names of arrivals that are later represented as settlers include Borich, Brajkovich, Erstic, Franicevich, Jurlina, Kostanich, Mihaljevich, Veza and Vujnovich first recognisable in 1896; Bilac, Cvitanovich, Curin, Dean, Jukich, Matijasevich, Srhoj and Ujdur first recognisable in 1897; Aleksich, Barbarich,

²⁵ Kraljevic, p. 184

²⁶ Kraljevic, p. 273

Babich, Erceg, Glamuzina, Huljich, Lipanovich, Matich, Nobilo, Silich, Simich, Sutich, Vrsaljko, Vodanovich and Vulinovich first recognisable in 1898.

Despite the large number of familiar names of families who later settled in New Zealand there is hard evidence that the overwhelming majority of arrivals to 1898 were Transients. Given the amount of firm data available, it would appear that the likely cause of the exodus from Dalmatia for 1896-98 was the devastating attack on vineyards by rust coupled with the low prices due to imports of cheap Italian wine, and that New Zealand's high gum prices made it a preferred destination option to other countries. However, the dramatic increase from 370 arrivals in 1897 (the highest annual total until then) to 750 in 1898 warrants some investigation and explanation. A review of the monthly arrivals reveals an even greater anomaly. In the last 6 months of 1898 over 570 arrivals are recorded, i.e. over 10% of the total arrivals between 1892 and 1914 arrived in this six month period.

It appears possible that this late surge resulted from steps being taken by legislators to slow down the rate of "Austrian" arrivals. The number of "Austrian" arrivals had picked up in the second half of the election year, 1896, but this increased immigration does not appear to have led to its use as an electioneering tactic, nor does it seem to have created protests in the press or at meetings. The arrivals increased again in 1897 and again do not seem to have raised any significant outcry. However, the government decided that there should be a full inquiry into the Kauri Gum Industry and set up a Commission to carry this out in December 1897.

The Commission heard submissions from settlers, merchants, landowners, some individual gumdiggers, and some of the few Dalmatians who had settled in New Zealand. It did not receive submissions from key Transients such as the Sokolich and other families from Istria (see Section 3) or the Belich and other families from Peljesac/Korcula (see Section 4). It is likely that the Commission had no factual information on the earnings of these Transients working collectively.

Most other submissions probably described a reasonable profile of the overwhelming majority of Austrian diggers who were Transients at the time of the 1898 Commission. They kept to themselves; few could speak good English (or had any interest to do so); they were frugal; they repatriated most of their earnings back to Dalmatia.

Some impression was given in the submissions that money was being earned by young men to start a better life back in Dalmatia. Ages given in the passenger lists show that most were mature males and it is probable that they had come to New Zealand to earn money to support impoverished families back in Dalmatia. This probably held true for those Transients who came to New Zealand through to World War I.

The Commission reported back in March 1898. It highlighted the main problem with "Austrian" gumdiggers – they were a sober, honest and hardworking group, but were not settlers; existing settlers were in danger of being forced off their land because the "Austrians" had worked out gumfields that settlers had previously used to provide cash while farms were being broken in; money earned by the "Austrians" was sent out of the country.

The key recommendation of the Commission was that gumdiggers would require a licence to dig which could only be obtained after 12 months residence in the country.²⁷

After the Commission's Report was presented in March 1898, Bills were drafted to restrict immigration of aliens and to limit access by aliens to dig gum on crown land. The number of Dalmatian arrivals soared in 1898 driven by the collapse of the wine industry in Dalmatia and the threat of impending immigration restrictions and denial of access to gumfields.

The New Zealand Herald's dream in 1893 of "sweeping the Austrians off the gumfields" and making them into settlershad proved to be illusory. About 170 who had arrived by the end of 1899 were still in New Zealand in 1916, out of a total of just over 2,000 arrivals (see Appendix 1), so about one in 12 stayed. Of these about 130 were naturalized by 1916 (see Appendix 1). However, a number of these stayers were the core to the chain migration of permanent settlers in New Zealand. There are 15 Alachs, 12 Babichs, Borichs. 14 Cvitanovichs. Dragicevichs, 12 Franichs, 10 Kokichs, 11 Leticas, 10 Lupis's, 10 Marinkovichs, 9 9 Matutinovichs. Marinovichs. Mihaljevichs, 14 Nolas, 12 Pivacs, 9 Radovancichs, 20 Silichs, 9 Sumichs, 9 Sundes, 11 Unkovichs, 36 Urlichs, and 11 Viskovichs on the 1916 Register of Aliens (see Appendix 1).

Over 60 of the pre-1900 arrivals married New Zealand European or Maori women, but this does not appear to have inhibited chain migration within their families.

²⁷ The 1898 Report, p.14

4. The Reaction to the First Surge

The Government went well beyond the recommendations of the Commission in its efforts to restrict "Austrian" immigration. It introduced two bills into Parliament to accomplish its aims in controlling immigration.

The first was The Kauri Gum Industry Bill 1898 which created Kauri Gum Reserves which could only be exploited by British citizens, and required licences to dig on other Crown land which could only be obtained after 12 months residence in New Zealand. Parts of this Bill were to provide incentives in access to gumfields to long term immigrants, particularly those who became naturalized citizens.

The second was the Immigration Restriction Bill 1898. This was essentially a "white New Zealand" legislation making it very difficult for Asians to immigrate to New Zealand. However, it could not be seen as based on race so applied to all arrivals. Its provisions required an immigrant to put up a deposit of £100 on landing which would be refunded after passing a basic literacy test.

The Bill provided under Section 3 that:

"Except in so far as is otherwise provided in the subsequent sections of this Act, it shall not be lawful for any person of any of the following classes (hereinafter called "prohibited immigrant") to land in New Zealand, that is to say:-

(1) Any person [other than of British (including Irish) birth and parentage]²⁸ who, when asked to do so by an officer appointed under this Act by the Governor, fails to himself write out and sign, in the presence of such officer, in any European language, an application in the form numbered two in the Schedule hereto, or as such other form as the Colonial Secretary from time to time directs:...."

And under the Schedule,

"FORM 2 – APPLICATION FOR ADMISSION INTO NEW ZEALAND.

Under the provision of "The Immigration Restriction Act, 1899", I [Full name, occupation and address], hereby make application for admission into New Zealand, and declare that I am not a prohibited immigrant within the meaning of that Act.

And I further declare as follows:My last place of abode during the last twelve months has been,
Dated at , this day of

[Signature of Applicant]"

If the applicant failed he was to be declared a prohibited immigrant and forfeit his deposit. The shipping company and the ship's master would be held jointly and severally liable for a penalty of £100, the Government's expenses for the immigrant's detention and maintenance and the cost of removal from New Zealand.

²⁸ The words in brackets were added when the Bill was passed into law in about October 1898.

While the Bill's real purpose was to restrict Asian immigration, the high monetary deposits and penalties could be used to control immigration of non-Asians. In fact, the Auckland Star of 28 September 1898, reporting on the debate on the Bill in the Legislative Council states,

"The Bill is one of considerable importance to us in Auckland in that among its provisions are clauses intended to check the influx of Austrians to our gumfields. This trouble has been assuming during the last few months even more serious proportions than at the time of the sitting of the Kauri Gum Commission about the beginning of the present year."

"It is the educational test clause which would exclude the majority of the Austrians now flocking to our Northern gumfields."

It would be very likely that Seegner (the German consul) and Langguth (the Austrian consul) would have been apprised of these Bills at an early stage. Their partnership, Seegner Langguth & Co had the agencies for both the Bremen-Italian ports-Sydney-Auckland and Trieste-Alexandria-Sydney-Auckland services bringing Dalmatians to New Zealand and so had a commercial interest in the "Austrian" immigration.

The Bills as drafted would have drastically reduced the number of Dalmatian men arriving in New Zealand to make money on the gumfields. A reasonable number were illiterate, few would be able to put up the £100 on arrival and the need to reside for 12 months before starting to dig gum would have imposed insuperable barriers for most potential gumdiggers.

Furthermore, shipping lines would not be prepared to expose themselves to the penalties they would face for bringing in prohibited immigrants.

However, there was a window of time available for migrants until the Bills were dealt with by Parliament and became law. For the first 6 months of 1898 arrivals from Dalmatia were 183, a comparable rate to 1897. The number of Dalmatian arrivals trebled over the last six months of 1898 and it would need a great stretch of the imagination to believe that this increase was not influenced by the prospect of a closure to the immigration door in the immediate future.

In any event immigration at the numbers of arrivals in the last six months of 1898 was unsustainable and concerns over this flood were raised and in some cases acted upon by those concerned. Langguth actively attempted to find employment for those who arrived, including alternative employment in Tasmania. In addition the issue had been taken up by the Austrian Ambassador with the British Government.²⁹

The Dalmatian journalist Matthew Ferri wrote to Governor of Dalmatia and the Bishop of Ragusa late in 1898 urging them to deter Dalmatians from coming to New Zealand. Late in December 1898 the Prime Minister, Richard Seddon, concerned that "some 300 to 400 Austrian gumdiggers here who must be a burden on someone" advised that "no more would be allowed to land unless they have the means to keep them for three months" (the time that they could not dig gum under the new Act).³¹

²⁹ Otago Daily Times, 14/1/1899

³⁰ New Zealand Herald, 27/12/1898

As it transpired, the door did not close as quickly or as completely as the Bills suggest. In the case of the the Kauri-gum Industry Act 1898 (see Appendix 5), the Legislative Council had reduced the required residence in New Zealand to obtain a gumdigging licence from 12 months to 3 months and removed the requirement for the licence holder to be a British citizen.³² The Act was to come into force on January 1, 1899.

The more onerous Immigration Restriction Bill 1898 was passed by Parliament, but because an Act passed the previous year to restrict Asian immigration had been refused Royal Assent, the Bill was Reserved, i.e. was not put into force until Royal Assent had been received. It was further debated and passed in October 1899 and it appears on the Statute Book as the Immigration Restriction Act 1899 (see Appendix 6), to come into force "on such date as shall be notified by Proclamation in the Gazette". The report on the debate in the Otago Witness demonstrated Seddon's anti-Austrian bias:

"Only a year ago 1000 Dalmatians entered the colony and so soon as the gumdiggings failed they would overflow the colony and enter into competition with our own people in different sections of labour, intermix with the people, and degrade our race."

The Act's primary purpose was to restrict Asian and other non-European immigration, but it could be and was used for non-British European immigrants as well. For instance, a Spanish stowaway was prosecuted in 1904 under this Act.³⁴

These Acts, particularly with the unknown start date of the Immigration Restriction Act, created an air of uncertainty and caution with the shipping companies. Passenger lists seem to have been manipulated (e.g. the Mokoia sailing which arrived in December 1898 had no Austrian passengers on its list but landed 123).

The Mokoia's first sailing of 1899 arrived on the 16th of January with 88 Austrians on board. It is likely that these arrivals had started their journey over two months previously. Some preparations had been made to provide jobs for them and they were all landed. However, only 34 Dalmatians arrived in the remaining eleven and a half months of 1899.

Legislation on the industry was amended in October 1899 by the Kauri Gum Amendment Act 1899. It was a short Act tightening up on the licences required to dig on Kauri Gum Reserves. The debate on the Bill³⁵ had some interesting exchanges. The Prime Minister and a Member were at odds over the minimum time it took to become naturalised, with no satisfactory answer being given during the debate; the Prime Minister confirmed that only small areas in the vicinity of settlements would be taken for Reserves [in the event 228,000 acres were taken]. However, the Act as passed made it clear that owners of freehold land could allow gum to be mined on that land without any licence. It is likely that the amendment permitting this was at the behest of landowners who valued the Dalmatian approach to mining.

Despite the many claims that were made in submissions to the 1898 Commission of the deleterious effect Dalmatian immigration would have on the kauri gum industry, the arrival of over 780 Dalmatians in the 12 months after the Commission reported seems to have taken place without any serious immediate disruption to the industry.

The legislation passed during 1898 and 1899 appears to have satisfied those protesting against Dalmatian immigration. In 1900 only 166 Dalmatians arrived. All but a handful of these were brought in by Union Steamship vessels, so it is possible that that shipping line was able to screen potential customers for literacy; it is also possible that this relatively small number of passengers did not come directly from Dalmatia but had lived in Australia (or even New Zealand) previously. A Mr Lupis produced New South Wales naturalisation papers on the "Westralia" sailing which arrived in Auckland on 23 January 1899.

However, numbers of Dalmatians attempted to enter the country by such means as buying tickets using English names (one group was caught out when they could not remember their "English" names at ship's muster). The matter was raised in Parliament in August 1900 and the Prime Minister decided to take tougher action.³⁶. He stated that "The Government had notified the Shipping Companies that under existing circumstances they would not permit any more Austrians to land, and he hoped the House would support the Government on this".

The effect of this was immediate and the New Zealand Herald ran an article from the Sydney Daily Telegraph in September 1900 stating that a large number of Austrians were stranded in Sydney "in consequence of the refusal of the New Zealand Government to permit them to land in that colony". 37 About 80 of the stranded men took up an offer of employment in New Caledonia and the remainder were returned to Austria at the expense of the Austrian Government. The Prime Minister's action effectively stopped Dalmatian immigration from then to the end of 1901 and only allowed minimum access to New Zealand until the last quarter of 1902.

Seddon not only blocked or constrained the number of Dalmatian arrivals over this time, but made it very difficult for Dalmatians to become naturalized, despite the thrust of the 1898 Commission towards turning transient gumdiggers into settlers. Aliens could become naturalized in less than three years. No Dalmatians were naturalised in 1900, and only 4 were naturalised in 1901. By the end of 1902 less than 80 out of the nearly 2000 Dalmatians who were in New Zealand at the end of 1898 had become naturalized, and of these 80, less than 20 gave gumdigging as their occupation when becoming naturalized (from Appendix 2 and Table 6).

³⁶ New Zealand Herald, 31/8/1900

³⁷ New Zealand Herald, 24/9/1900

As a secondary effect the Immigration Restriction Act 1899 excluded those who could not write in their own hand a certification that they were not a prohibited immigrant, in a European language, and sign their name. This would mean that illiterate Dalmatians would not have been allowed to land after 1898.

The Kauri-gum Industry Act 1898 was aimed in part to protect the ability of settlers to dig gum by setting aside Kauri Gum Reserves available solely to British nationals. When finally gazetted the area of land in the reserves totalled 228,000 acres. Crown land not in Kauri Gum Reserves was available to holders of an "ordinary licence" which could be obtained by those who had resided in New Zealand for three months prior to their application for the licence. This area of land totalled 207,000 acres.

Holders of "ordinary licences" could also dig on Native land with the owners' consent and on land occupied or owned by a person with such person's consent (Sections 11.4 and 11.5 of the Act). [Note: The Amendment Act of 1899 removed the need for licences on freehold land]

Making the Kauri Gum Reserves unavailable to Dalmatians (at least until they became naturalised, as some did) certainly reduced the options on where to dig, but the remaining area of Crown Land available was still considerable. Furthermore, it took some time to gazette all the Kauri Gum Reserves and the area of

Reserves was 41,000 acres in 1899 rising to 212,000 acres in 1901.³⁸

Native land could also be made available for a royalty or annual payment.³⁹ Despite some hostile submissions to the Commission against Dalmatians by Maori at Te Kaeo relations overall appeared good, with intermarriage in Mangonui in particular and the friendly "Tarara" connection.

Relationships with private landowners varied widely. In the Far North the Yates family controlled tens of thousands of acres of rough country and appear to have farmed out the gumdigging rights to land which possibly appeared at that time to have little future for any other use. 40

Others, such as the Mitchelsons in Hobson County may initially have had the same "gum royalty" approach, but later realised that by draining swamps and/or excavating the field on a face had the result of significantly enhancing the value of the land.

From submissions made to the Kauri Gum Commission in 1897 it appeared that Dalmatians preferred to dig on private land, with 6 major land-owning submitters recording that they had some 800 Austrians digging on their fields alone.

As the Dalmatians were the only group who worked collectively and used this technique they were used by landowners

³⁸ The Figs and the Vines, Gumdigging in the Kaipara, Dalmatian Pioneer Trust

³⁹ The 1898 Report, p.45, Evidence of Matthew Tupuni

⁴⁰ The 1898 Report, p.46, Evidence of Gustavus Yates

with gumland potentially usable for farming. Digging an area on a face implied that all of a particular area had to be dug over, which meant that regardless of gum yields there would be a commitment with the landowner to complete the project. It also meant that the gumdigging group must have had the experience to gauge whether the gum yield would justify the excavation. In this field Dalmatians were not in competition with British diggers or settlers.

Arrangements were more complex where land included drainage of swamps, but major drainage projects continued to take place on private land in the following years. 41 Agreements with landowners on the major drainage contracts must have required negotiation and must have been based again on the collective's assessment of the amount of recoverable gum in the area to be drained. It would also have required a clear understanding within the collective as each member's rights as that member's "capital" in the project was the unpaid time it took to drain the swamp prior to any income being derived. As some agreements were for rights to dig for up to 10 years (see Falconetti's submission above) there must have been agreements over changes of membership of the collective during the project.

Finally, where a landholder was merely using the land for its gum revenue, the Dalmatian work methods recovered a much greater tonnage of gum from any area than the individual "pothole" method used by British diggers.

So with clear advantages over British diggers on privately controlled land and with access to both Crown land and native land, it is not surprising that Dalmatians did not pursue gum in the Reserves.

The number of "Austrians" in Hobson County increased by about 200 between the 1896 and 1901 censuses - a relatively small proportion of the arrivals (see Table 5). Coromandel County increased its numbers by 330 and Mangonui County by with substantial increases 180. Whangarei, Otamatea, and Rodney Counties. It would seem likely that many of the large numbers of new diggers that arrived in the latter half of 1898 would were inexperienced and may have sought new gumfields being opened up rather than competing on established fields. It would also seem likely that those without the assistance of those with experience would have fared poorly.

By mid-1901 it appears that many had given up. Reports of up to 200 leaving for Sydney in the first half of 1901⁴², while possibly inflated, indicated higher than usual numbers returning to Dalmatia. Further reports stated that Dalmatians were leaving for New Caledonia for work at modest rates of pay. 43

So what actually happened to the gum industry? Gum production rose from 6,600 tons in 1897 at an average price of £60.3 per ton to 10, 200 tons in 1900 at an average price of £60.1 per ton (see Table 4). Average prices had dropped just under 10% in 1899 on record production of 11,100 tons, but part of this drop may be attributed to the acceptance of lower grade gum by the market.

⁴¹ The 1898 Report, p.28, Evidence of R Mitchelson

⁴² Auckland Star, 21/5/1901

⁴³ New Zealand Herald, 1/7/1901

In 1901 and 1902 gum production dropped to 7,500 tons at an average price of £59.3 per ton and 7,400 tons at an average price of £60.8 per ton (see Table 4). So the prices were holding up but it must have been harder to produce the gum economically. This is unsurprising as the easiest gum to produce would have been extracted first. And once again gum could be produced most economically by the most experienced and best organised groups leaving inexperienced newcomers struggling.

The drift of Dalmatians back to Dalmatia or to places such as New Caledonia in 1901-2 is therefore understandable.

5. The Second Surge of Arrivals from Central South Dalmatia

Prime Minister, Richard Seddon's steps to restrict Dalmatian immigration were effective. From the arrival of the ss Mokoia on 16 January 1899 until the end of October 1902 less than 300 Dalmatians arrived. That is about 80 per annum. Dalmatian immigrant numbers had started to increase again in June and July 1900.

In July 1900 the ss Waihora arrived in Auckland with about 20 Dalmatians on board. They did not appear on one passenger list and on the other, although noted as "Austrians", about half had given British surnames. In From Distant Villages Steven Jelicich recounts that Dalmatians were not allowed to land in Auckland and continued on to Wellington. Here the established Dalmatian immigrant Mariano Vella intervened with Seddon, who permitted the immigrants to land provided they did not go north to the gumfields.

However, this incident provoked Seddon tightening up on Dalmatian immigration. In August 1900 The New Zealand Herald⁴⁴ reported that the Prime Minister had been advised that Dalmatians were arriving in New Zealand using British names. He replied that the shipping companies had been advised that no more Austrians would be allowed to land. The Sydney Telegraph⁴⁵ reported the next month that Austrians had been stranded in Sydney with some being redirected to New Caledonia and some returned to Austria at that government's expense.

Over the next two years less than 50 Dalmatians landed in New Zealand. With a handful of exceptions the Huddart Parker line brought in no Dalmatians from Sydney over this period; the Union Steamship line brought in the remainder. The Immigration Restriction Act 1899 was still in force and continued for many years fulfilling its main purpose of excluding or severely curtailing Asian immigration to New Zealand. Shipping companies' exposure to penalties for landing immigrants who could not make the mandatory immigration statement in a European language (see Appendix 6) protected themselves by carrying out the test before allowing passengers disembark.

Some of the arrivals may have been naturalised in New Zealand or Australia. Certainly some came as settlers; the Silich family of six, the Didovich family of 3, the Francovich or Franchi family of six and seven members of the Lupis family. Mrs Dragicevich and Mrs Zenovich also arrived with settlement in mind (see Appendix 3).

The numbers of Dalmatians who left during this period of control would have far outnumbered arrivals. Some of these would have been successful transient diggers returning to Dalmatia after making the cash they were seeking when they ventured to New Zealand, but many of those who were unsuccessful turned to Australia or New Caledonia as alternative destinations.

⁴⁴ New Zealand Herald, 31/8/1900

⁴⁵ New Zealand Herald, 24/9/1900

The situation changed dramatically from October 1902. 58 Dalmatians arrived in November and December, over 520 in 1903 and 600 in 1904. Seddon may have come under pressure from the British Government. In July 1902 he was reported to have advised the Austrian Ambassador to Britain while there that no distinction was made between Austrians and others. 46 was patently untrue correspondence to The New Zealand Herald demonstrated just how untrue this was. For instance Joseph Franich wrote that he had applied formally for naturalization twice since December and had not even received a reply⁴⁷. He went on to point out the refusal by Seddon to allow shipping companies Austrians.

The matter was also taken up in Parliament by the member Mr Fowlds who gave notice that he would ask the Colonial Secretary whether his attention had been brought to the meeting between the Prime Minister and the Austrian Ambassador in London, and to "substantiate the Prime Minister's statement by immediately causing naturalisation papers to be issued to those Austrians who have made applications and complied with the law", 48,49 The Austrian Government continued to monitor events and as late as 1905 sent the warship Panther to New Zealand "in consequence of complaints from Austrian settlers in New Zealand regarding alleged grievances".50

As with the number of Dalmatian arrivals, the number of Dalmatian naturalizations increased dramatically. From only 25 naturalizations in 1902, they increased to 100 in 1903, 184 in 1904 and 126 in 1905 (from Table 6).

Generally speaking, names were more clearly and correctly recorded than on vessels arriving in the 1890's and names could be responsibly attributed to about 75% of the passengers. Although ages were supposed to be recorded on the passenger lists, the overall percentage of ages recorded in 1903 and 1904 was under 50%.

Up until the end of the first quarter of 1903 the overall age range was similar to earlier years and may have reflected the return to New Zealand of earlier transients and those who had had to stop over in Australia or New Caledonia when restrictions were eased. (The Huddart and Parker ships kept nearly full records and had age ranges similar to those of earlier arrivals throughout 1903 and 1904. It is possible that the Union Steamship line had an exclusive arrangement with the Orient Line and Nord Deutsch to carry Dalmatia to New Zealand passengers on the Sydney-Auckland leg of the journey.)

Typically in earlier years the number of arrivals who were 21 years of age or under was well under 10% of the total. The age distribution changed dramatically after the first quarter of 1903 with 32% of the total recorded ages being 21 or under. If the assumption that the Union Steamship line was the only line carrying immigrants travelling directly to New Zealand was correct, the percentage rises to 39%.

The proportion of the immigrants coming from different districts had also changed (see Table 1). Noticeably the proportion from the coast near Podgora has stepped up and the inland area around Vrgorac has increased dramatically. Numbers from the Neretva appear for the first time. The immigrants come from villages spread right across Dalmatia and don't seem to be dominated by those villages with a heavy reliance on wine production. There had been obvious changes at both ends of the immigration trail in the 5 years from the crisis of 1898.

In Dalmatia the persistent drivers of emigration – poverty, overpopulation, lack of land and Austrian maladministration remained. So transient emigration continued to support families in Dalmatia or to earn sufficient money to create an acceptable life there continued.

The sudden increase in the number of young men of conscription age arriving in New Zealand points to a new reason for emigration founded on permanent rather than transient emigration. This may also have been the reason for others leaving permanently who may have completed their conscription service but would have been mobilised into the armed forces in the event of a war breaking out.

So what political changes had occurred since the turn of the century to change the attitude towards conscription?

In 1892 Italy had joined Germany and Austria to form a defensive alliance. Italy had been bought off in the negotiations by the trade agreement that allowed Italy to sell a wide range of goods, particularly wine, to Austria at very low duties.

By 1900 it was obvious that the Ottoman Empire was crumbling and while some peoples strove to become independent the major European nations also sought to take advantage of this. In 1902 Italy and France made a secret agreement to establish their claims in North Africa that effectively nullified Italy's obligations under the 1892 agreement with Austria and Germany.52 seized Libya in 1911 contemplated in its secret agreement with France by going to war with Turkey. It did not support its fellow members in their defensive pact at the start of World War I and was bought off again by promises of further land gains and went to war with Austria and Germany.]

At the same time Italy declared an interest in Albania on the East side of the Adriatic, an area that Austria considered its sphere of interest. ⁵³ By 1905, Italy was opening up communications with eastern parts of the Adriatic ⁵⁴ and establishing an official presence there.

The reaction of Austria was that it should not allow Italy to dominate the Adriatic and commenced a major expansion of its Mediterranean fleet.⁵⁵ The British Ambassador reported that the Austrian policy was to have 50% advantage over the Italians and their shipbuilding program from the early 1900's was to commission one new battleship with supporting fleet each year.56 As coastal Istria and Dalmatia were the only Austrian seacoasts it is likely that the seamen recruited for this expansion would come largely from these areas. Furthermore, the conscription period was for 4 years in the Navy against 3 years for the Army). 57 Finally, the chances of conscriptees being involved in a real war rather than serving a peaceful period of time in the armed services must have appeared to have been increasingly likely. This would also have been of concern to men who had completed their compulsory service but who would have been called up in any general mobilization.

Despite the fact that about the same numbers (1120) of Dalmatians arrived in 1903 and 1904 as arrived in the peak years of 1897 and 1898, the reaction of the people and the government was much more restrained. References to "Austrians" in The New Zealand Herald had none of the anti-Austrian sentiment in its letters to the editor or editorials that were common in the 1890's. It would appear that the opposition to Dalmatian immigration on economic grounds had subsided if not disappeared. Furthermore, some news items were constructive, seeking to assist in allowing the Dalmatians to settle and become naturalized.58

Many aspects of life in New Zealand had changed in the six years between the two surges of immigration. As a whole New Zealand had come out of a prolonged 1880/1890s depression. Many of the farms in North Auckland that were being broken in in 1897 were now in productive pasture. The dairy industry was developing rapidly there with factories to take farmers' milk to make into saleable butter and cheese

In many areas the possibility of farmers supplementing their incomes had become academic as the gum that could be exploited by a single digger in more settled areas had all been extracted. Many of those who would have dug gum as unemployed labourers in the 1890's were now able to find work in a more buoyant economy.

While the vast majority of Dalmatians were still Transients, sufficient numbers had settled to change the perception that all were short-term arrivals taking money out of the country. Of those who had arrived in New Zealand by the end of 1905, 450 were still in New Zealand in 1916 (see Table 2). By the end of 1905 Dalmatians were involved amongst other occupations as farmers and winemakers at Herekino, flaxmilling at Waipapakauri, fishing on the Kaipara harbour, winegrowing and orchards at Oratia and Whangaparoa, and restaurant owners in Taranaki.

Numbers of Dalmatians married in New Zealand were increasing and although only about 30 Dalmatians had married locals between 1896 and 1904 there would have been many more commitments to marriage by 1904 given the long engagement times of that era and the need for a groom to be confident he had the resources to support a non-working wife and family.

Seddon, who had virtually closed the gate on Dalmatian arrivals in 1899, may not have seen any political mileage in repeating the process in 1905. Despite Seddon still having all the legislation in place that allowed him to take action in 1899 no action was taken by his government to restrict Dalmatian immigration.

Essentially, Transients were allowed to continue to come to New Zealand with only a few restraints such as the basic literacy test. Families with histories as Transients since 1892/3 appear again in 1903-1905, but the overall pattern of arrivals has changed. For instance, on the February 1904 sailing of the ss Waikare from Sydney to Auckland (which carried the Author's father) the New Zealand Herald reported that of the 60 Austrians on board 15 were to be involved in vinegrowing, 15 were going to Taranaki and only the remaining half were to become gumdiggers. 59

Apart from the Kauri Gum Reserves, Dalmatians had come to dominate the mining of gum through their collective approach and mining techniques. From census figures (see Table 4) "Austrians" in New Zealand in 1896 were about one quarter of the number who gave their occupation as "Gumdigger". In 1906 the number of "Austrians" in New Zealand was about two thirds the number of those who gave their occupation "Gumdigger". The impact of the arrival of 1100 Dalmatians, most of whom became new gumdiggers contributed to production of gum rising from 7,400 tons in 1902 to 10,900 tons in 1905. The average price per ton dropped from £60.8 per ton in 1902 to £51.5 per ton in 1905. Although the decrease in price may have been affected by the additional production, it is likely that the quality of gum dug was lower on average with the consequent effect of lowering the average price.

The high rate of extraction of quality grade gum was not sustainable and annual production of all gum dropped to 5,500 tons in 1908. Up until this time the major market for kauri gum had been in the manufacture of top quality varnishes, and when the availability of gum of the required quality declined the volume mined also declined. While the shortage of quality gum kept the price high, it was limited by the availability of other resins from the Asia and Africa.

Annual arrivals of Dalmatians dropped to the low figure of 131 in 1908, with arrivals from 1905-1908 inclusive totalling 780, and it is likely that as many returned to Dalmatia or other destinations in the same period. Age records on passenger lists were poorly kept, with no records at all for 1906, but of the low number of those recorded about 18% were 21 or under. Areas of origin were well spread apart from Novi, but the area inland from Podgora continued to provide the largest numbers of any of the areas. About 340 of those on the Register of Aliens 1917 (see Table 2) claim to have arrived in this period. If they had arrived in New Zealand intending to return to Dalmatia, they would have had 6 years at least to earn their targeted savings prior to the outbreak of World War I. This means that it is likely that most of the 340 had arrived intending to stay. Even after making allowances for errors in the Register, this represents a major shift in arrivals from "Transients" to "Stayers".

⁵⁹ New Zealand Herald, 2/3/1904

Furthermore, it would mean that the immigration numbers for Transients would have dropped to just over 100 per annum. This possibly reflects that the reduction in availability of gum was conveyed to potential transient diggers in Dalmatia.

A major change occurred in the market for Kauri Gum from about 1908. Poor quality and low purity gum which had not been saleable in quantity found buyers in linoleum producing companies.60 Gum with a purity as low as 70% could be used for linoleum manufacture albeit at a much lower price than varnish grade gum. It follows that gum deposits with large volumes of the lower grades, preferably mixed with some varnish grade gum. would be needed for economic extraction. Most of such deposits were in layers fairly deep in the ground and needed the collective Dalmatian approach to mining. It is not surprising that the number of "gumdiggers" in the 1911 Census was about the same as the number of "Austrians" in the Census (see Table 4). Obviously, not all "Austrians" were Dalmatian gumdiggers, but it gives an indication of the dominance that the Dalmatians were exerting over that occupation.

Gum production rose to 8,300 tons in 1909 and remained at between 7,600 tons and 8,800 tons per annum until World War I disrupted the gum trade. Prices declined to low of £51 per ton reflecting the amount of lower quality of gum, then rose to about £60 per ton by 1914 (see Table 4).

Arrivals increased to about 250 per annum in 1909 and 1910. It is likely that the increase was in part due to the increased volume of gum available, but it is also likely that some increase was due to the increasing instability in the Balkans. Age records for 1910 arrivals are poor, but from fairly good passenger list records for 1909 about 35% were 21 or younger. About 220 on the 1917 Register of Aliens claim to have arrived out of 500 arrivals over the two years. Once again there may be inaccuracies in the Register, and some Transients may have intended to stay longer than 4 years, but this is still a high ratio of Stayers to arrivals. If correct it would put the Transient arrivals at about 140 per annum for the two years.

⁶⁰ The Stayers, p.14

6. The Final Wave before World War I

While the New Zealand gum industry had settled into a new phase with the new market for linoleum grade gum the political situation in the Balkans was becoming more unstable. Italy and Austria remained nominal allies but the Austrians still retained their aim of surpassing Italy's sea power and continued to commission additional battleships and supporting fleets. This in turn increased the numbers of naval conscripts needed to man the vessels.

As the Ottoman Empire continued to crumble, events on land were on the march that led to World War I. Austria had administered Bosnia for some decades even though it was part of the Ottoman Empire, but in 1908 Austria annexed Bosnia into the Austro-Hungarian Empire. This enraged Serbia as many of Bosnian's citizens were Serbs (a situation to be repeated in 1992 when Bosnia declared independence). Worse still, Austria placed a garrison on Turkish territory that blocked Serbia from contact with their fellow Serbs in Montenegro and access to the Adriatic Sea. A series of Balkan wars and insurrections followed culminating in the events of 1914.

The arrivals for 1911 through to 1914 have the appearance of escaping from a dangerous place rather than the earlier reasons for leaving Dalmatia for New Zealand. Arrivals in 1912, 1913 and 1914 had had almost full age records in the passenger lists. For 1912 about 50% of arrivals are 21 or younger, for 1913, about 42% and for 1914 about 47%. For the first time significant numbers of 15 major Transient families were 21 or younger. In addition, 43, or about 5% were women.

The numbers of emigrants were well spread over the whole of the region and there was no apparent indication of a local problem that could drive emigration from that area.

The start of World War I in August 1914 brought an end to the emigration of Transient Dalmatian gumdiggers to New Zealand. It had started in the 1880's but of over 5600 Dalmatian arrivals since 1891 (see Appendix 4) only about 1850 men remained in New Zealand in 1916 (see Table 3). (This 1700 included some Transients who had been trapped in New Zealand by the start of the war, and who returned to Dalmatia when they were able to after the war.) Some had achieved their goals of supporting their families in hard economic times in Dalmatia or of earning enough to give them a reasonable start to life when they returned to Dalmatia. Others had had not had the toughness to survive the harsh way of life of the gumdigger or had arrived at a time when New Zealand conditions were too difficult to make a reasonable living, so returned to Dalmatia or chose to emigrate to other countries.

While there were over 5,600 arrivals noted it is impossible to determine the numbers who ventured to New Zealand more than once, although there enough family records of this to confirm that it was not an unusual occurrence.

From a New Zealand historical perspective the Transients could be seen as akin to those arrivals in the 19th century gold rushes. Their period of influence, particularly in North Auckland lasted for almost 30 years and the work methods they developed resulted in a greater recovery of kauri gum than would have otherwise been achieved. Furthermore by mining by a full face method, often coupled with land drainage, they turned much gum wasteland into productive farmland. Their lengthy period of involvement allowed them to encourage and serve as a shelter for further permanent immigrants from Dalmatia who have since contributed so much to New Zealand.

7. Transients Trapped in New Zealand by World War I and their Final Return

There are no firm figures for the number of Transient Dalmatians in New Zealand when war broke out in 1914. There were iust under 1000 non-naturalised Dalmatians on the List of Jugoslav and Austrian Aliens, 1918.61 Of a sample of 400 of these, half had New Zealand death records, indicating that the other half had returned to Dalmatia or had gone elsewhere. 62 Between two and three hundred Dalmatians had wives still in Dalmatia at the start of the war⁶³ and from death records again, less than 50 of these wives appear to have come to New Zealand when able to after the war. While figures cannot be determined definitively, it would appear that there were about 500 Transients trapped by the start of the war and up to half of these were supporting wives and/or families in Dalmatia and most of the rest were single men supporting other family members. Apart from sending some support via the Red Cross, those who wished to continue to support their families in Dalmatia were unable to do so because of the New Zealand legislation forbidding trade with the enemy.

Much has been written about the muddled thinking by the government and how to deal with an immigrant group from a country with which New Zealand was at war, of whom about 50% were naturalised New Zealanders. This muddled thinking coupled with rising emotions as the New Zealand casualties increased during the war led, late in the war and for some time after to what amounted to official persecution of all Dalmatian born residents.

Some writers have considered this to be an extension of the anti-Dalmatian outcry of the late 1890's that led to the Seddon government's restraints on Dalmatian immigration in the early 1900's. The evidence does not support this link, and in fact by 1914 Dalmatians were seen as excellent immigrants even though there was still an element of the Transient practice of sending money earned from mining gum out of the country. There are several items of evidence to confirm this.

Firstly there is the record of editorials and letters to the Editor of major newspapers. Leading up to the crisis due to the flood of Dalmatians in 1898 there were many hostile letters written against Dalmatian immigration, particularly of the Transients who represented the vast majority of Dalmatian immigrants at that time. From 1900 through to 1913 a search of the New Zealand Herald on Papers Past using key words "Austrian influx", immigration" and "Austrian gumdiggers" found only one mildly anti-Austrian letter and a number of articles which were in fact favourably inclined to the "Austrians".

In 1909 a further Commission of Inquiry into the Kauri Gum Industry was carried out by Mr Gow. Mr Gow was in favour of retaining the Kauri Gum Reserves and

⁶¹ The Stayers, Appendix B

The Stayers, p. 26

⁶³ The Stayers, p. 26

Crown-owned gumbearing swamps for British gumdiggers (presumably including naturalised Dalmatians) but then ran into some difficulties with the "British" way of mining gum:

"I may remark that the great success of the Austrians on the fields has been owing to their co-operative system of work as against the Britishers individualistic methods",

"After seeing the excellent work done by the Austrians in the Port Albert Reserves I am afraid the suggestion [to cut the land into 1 acre sections and issuing them to individual diggers] is unworkable. To my mind it would be utterly impossible for one man to work an area of swamp land as to leave it in a satisfactory condition", and

"All Austrians should be debarred from working in the Government swamps or reserves, as they can get full employment from private holders of gum lands or swamps. I understand that private owners prefer the Austrians to the British diggers".

Gow's report shows a significant shift from the report of the 1898 Commission in that the settler sentiment which was so anti-Austrian in the submissions to that Commission had now changed to support, due to the land improvements that can be achieved through collective, full face digging.

A further Commission was appointed in 1914⁶⁴ to report on the Crown's Kauri gum Reserves. It criticised the management of gum mining in the Government's Reserves compared to land under private ownership.

"He would be a most indifferent private individual who would have allowed his land to be dealt with in such a manner. If the private owner ever did allow his lands to be so injuriously dealt with he has long since acquired wisdom. The State, however, has failed to profit by experience, and the serious injury to the land is still proceeding."

The Report goes on to dramatically show examples of the management of adjacent land parcels, one privately owned and the other Crown land. Dalmatians were the only gumdiggers who mined the gum and left it in a suitable state for cultivation. The relationship was of mutual benefit to gumdigger and landowner and consequently there was no hostility between them.

Even the argument that the Transient gumdiggers were taking up gum and exporting its value overseas had lost most of its force where digging took place on private land and the upgrading of the land left an asset in place of the gum.

some prejudices against Dalmatians would have persisted in some people's minds the overwhelming evidence points to a friendly relationship between Dalmatians and New Zealanders at the start of 1914. Over 130 of the Dalmatian arrivals since 1896 had married New Zealanders and many had moved away from gumdigging into other occupations.

⁶⁴ Report of the Commission appointed to inspect and classify the Kauri Gum Reserves in the Auckland Land District, 1914

The outbreak of war immediately split the Dalmatian immigrants into two parts: naturalised Dalmatians who were British subjects and citizens of a country at war with Austria and those who had not become naturalised who were still citizens of Austria, a country at war with New Zealand.

Initially, naturalised New Zealanders continued to act and to be treated as ordinary New Zealanders. Many supported anti-Austrian protests and some enlisted and served with the New Zealand Army. For those who had moved away from gumdigging as a main occupation life went on almost as normal in their new occupation and the community in which they lived. As an example, the author's father and his business partner bought a farm near Papakura in 1915, worked as drainage and roading contractors for the local authority, negotiated with the local authority and other landowners to form a road adjacent to the farm and together with another farmer secured the contract with the local authority to form the road in 1918

However, their rights as New Zealand citizens were eroded under legislation progressively passed during the War. Irrespective of their loyalty to New Zealand emotions triggered by New Zealand's high casualties understandably led to prejudices against those who could for any reason be seen as an "enemy". By mid-1918 the naturalised Dalmatians were generally in no different situation to the non-naturalised Dalmatians and came under the direction of Mr Cullen, the Commissioner for Aliens.

The non-naturalised Dalmatians were not automatically interned as were Germans and ethnic Austrians, but were subject to a requirement to report regularly to police and their movements around the country were also subject to control. As "enemy aliens" their commercial rights were severely restricted.⁶⁵ The Transients were dealt a number of blows by the outbreak of war; they could not send money back Dalmatia to support their families, and probably about half were married; very few were naturalised and so had to suffer the restraints of being "enemy aliens"; they were gumdiggers and the kauri gum market collapsed with the start of the war, with the government stepping in to buy gum at half the pre-war price to be topped up to the Governments net realisation when eventually sold,66 and in 1915 gum production dropped to half the 1914 tonnage (see Table 4).

The changes in the kauri gum industry forced the Transients into other occupations, and there were only a few occupations that were available to the skill short Dalmatians. Added to this the English language skills of many Transients would have been poor as they lived and worked together rather than becoming part of any community with English speaking members. Initially this led them to work as labourers on public works, which in turn created conflicts with those who were already engaged in that work.

Eventually in 1918 they came under the control of Mr Cullen and worked where he directed them until Cullen's authority to direct them was revoked in September 1919.

⁶⁵ The Stayers, p.23

⁶⁶ The Stayers, p.22

Apart from the economic difficulties faced by the Transients and their families, most would have had problems in the emotional sphere as well. They had come to New Zealand as short-term money earners, but some probably had arrived as early as 1910 and probably were not able to return until about 1920, a long time to be absent from wife and family. They may have been anti-Austrian but as they had no ambition to settle in New Zealand and would not have any feeling of loyalty towards this country, but may have been under some pressure to demonstrate that they were. Then there was the problem faced by most Dalmatians that brothers and cousins would have been conscripted to fight for Austria, with the inevitable consequences of death or injury for many.

Mr Cullen directed Dalmatians into essential industries from mid-1918 until September 1919. He was overzealous in pursuing Dalmatians, but surprisingly most of his actions were taken against naturalized Dalmatians rather than the non-naturalized Transients (more naturalized than non-naturalized Dalmatians were interned). To some extent this would have resulted from resistance of long-settled immigrants losing their rights as New Zealand citizens. But it probably also means that the Transients kept a low profile and worked as instructed.

There were just under 1000 nonnaturalised Dalmatians on the List of Jugoslav and Austrian Aliens compiled in 1918. Over 100 of those were actually naturalised (see Appendix 2), so the true figure of non-naturalised Dalmatians would have been around 850.

Under Regulations promulgated in 1915 and continued until 1924, "enemy aliens" could only leave New Zealand with the consent of the Minister of Defence. While the figures cannot be stated definitively, it would appear that there were about 500 Transients trapped by the start of the war and up to half of these were supporting wives and/or families in Dalmatia while most of the remainder supported wider family groups. Apart from some sending some support via the Red Cross, those who wished to continue to support their families in Dalmatia had been unable to do so because of the New Zealand legislation forbidding trade with the enemy.

Returning to Dalmatia after hostilities had ceased was not straightforward. Fighting had ended with an Armistice but the war did not officially end until mid-1919. In addition, Dalmatia was no longer part of Austria, but part of the new Kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes which had to set up its systems to handle arrivals and departures into the new country.

The first, and presumably the most desperate, returnees were repatriated as Austrians in 1919 after a very uncomfortable voyage to Germany via an internment in Sydney. An account of this voyage told by M.P. Rakich is given in Stephen Jelicich's book From Distant Villages. The names of the repatriates are given in Appendix H of The Stayers,. Most are married. Very few are young men. Almost 20% of the repatriates are from Novi and include family names such as Sokolich, Piskulich, Jovanovich, Kukalj and Kabalin who regularly provided

Transient gumdiggers over nearly 30 years.

Some of those who came to New Zealand intending a short stay will have changed their minds. From Table 3 there may be as many as 1970 Dalmatians in New Zealand in 1916, but the true figure is likely to be about 1950. From Table 5 there were 1588 people in New Zealand in the 1921 Census who gave their birthplace as Yugoslavia. This number would include Serbs and Montengrins, but their number would have been offset by gumdiggers from Fiume, Istria and Losinj which were part of Italy in 1921. This probably means around 350 returned to Dalmatia from 1918 to 1921. It seems that the requirement to get the consent of the Minister of Defence to leave the country was not restrictive.

A sample of 400 single men in New Zealand in 1916 (taken from Appendix B of The Stayers) had New Zealand death records for about half, indicating that the other half had eventually returned to Dalmatia or gone elsewhere. Between two and three hundred Dalmatians had wives still in Dalmatia at the start of the war and from death records again, less than 50 of these wives appear to have come to New Zealand when able to after the war.

For a group of non-permanent immigrants the Transients had a major impact on rural economy. Auckland's collective working approach led to large areas of swampland to being drained and converted into productive land. On other gumland they similarly left the land in good condition for cultivation. They provided the starting point for the Stayers who took over their methods and after World War I improved them by using power driven gum-washing machines. Their methods allowed a far greater recovery of gum from any area and even if much of its value went back to Dalmatia a great deal was spent in New Zealand.

Notes:

^{1.} Derived from Table VI of the thesis of Albert White, which in turn was derived from the Census of the Dominion of New Zealand.

^{2.} The figures from 1881 to 1916 are for birthplaces in Austria-Hungary; for 1921 for birthplaces in Jugoslavia.

^{3.} Rodney County figures are predominantly Bohemians from Puhoi and should be ignored in any assessment of Dalmatians.

Appendix 2 Occupations and Naturalization Dates

Appendix 2. Naturalization of Dalmatian Immigrants to 1916

The name, occupation and year of naturalisation in this table are extracted from "Names Etc of ALIEN FRIENDS who have been NATURALIZED in NEW ZEALAND" Government Printer 1918. That document is almost certainly the list of naturalised subjects referred to in the Memorandum issued to Police in January 1918 (reproduced in Appendix J of The Stayers). The Memorandum provided that Aliens registering under the Registration of Aliens Act 1917 could not claim to be naturalized unless they were among the names on the list.

Appendix 3. Alphabetical List of Readable Names of Arriving Passengers on Ships from Sydney to Auckland 1892 to 1914

Compiling the passenger lists for all recognisable Dalmatian immigrants travelling from Sydney to Auckland from 1892 was a long tedious task. It would not have been done without two major digitisation efforts which cut down the time involvement to a fraction of what it would have been, had the documents had to be researched manually.

The first digitisation of assistance was the digitisation of the New Zealand Herald whose "Shipping" item enabled the vessels likely to be carrying immigrants to be identified. This digitisation carried out by New Zealand Archives is available on Papers Past. In addition to this identification it allowed a check on how many passenger lists were missing i.e. if the Herald advised that a sailing had taken place and no passenger list was available, it allowed an estimate to be made of the missing immigrants. Meaningful lists started in 1892 and until 1896 had substantial gaps in the passenger lists. From then on the gaps were much fewer and estimates were more reliable.

The source for the names in this Appendix is the digitised Family Search link:

https://familysearch.org/pal:/MM9.3.1/TH-267-12824-4404-44?cc=1609792&wc=MMBG-TBT:386496628#uri=https%3A%2F%2Ffamilysearch.org%2Frecords%2Fcollection%2F160979 2%2Fwaypoints and the places of origin have been sourced from Part A of Now Respected, Once Despised by Andrew D Trlin, and the List of Jugoslav and Austrian Aliens, 1918.

The Family Search link has shipping information on all New Zealand ports. For the purposes of this book relating to Transient Dalmatian arrivals, the search for information for this Appendix was limited to passengers travelling steerage class from Sydney to Auckland from 1892 to 1914 (records are less complete prior to 1892). This approach appears to be statistically acceptable for immigration figures for this period (see note to Appendix 4).

For each recorded voyage the information provides two passenger lists and a crew list. On leaving Sydney the list was to include, each passenger's name, sex, marital status, whether child or adult, nationality and occupation. On arrival in Auckland another list was required with equivalent items but with the addition of passengers' ages. Unfortunately the required information was not always provided. Furthermore, where the information was supposedly provided, it was indecipherable. As a result only about 3700 names were readable out of the 5,600 known Dalmatian arrivals over the period reviewed. Of the readable names, some did not appear to be correct Dalmatian names while others could reasonably accepted as Dalmatian names with an adjustment in spelling.

The reasons for this are manifold and extend to both passengers and purser on the sailings.

Until 1899 there was no requirement for immigrants to be literate. Many of the immigrants till then, particularly the older ones, would not have been able to write their names. Very few in any year would have been able to converse or answer questions in English. Until the early 1900's official documents for Dalmatians were issued in Italian and German. Almost invariably, immigrants in the early 1890's were recorded with an Italian version (or versions) of their name. e.g. Piazzon for Pijacun.

The approach of pursers or their staff in recording names varied enormously. It is understandable that they would have some difficulties dealing with Dalmatian surnames such as Mrzljak, but in some cases no effort was made at all. For instance, in many cases the names were recorded as Petar M. or Jakov B. or similar. In many cases too, one or even two of the lists for a sailing would merely state "52 Austrians" or the like. While some handwriting was very clear in some cases it was illegible.

In a few cases when politics affected the composition of lists, some Dalmatians gave English names and in one major instance 123 Dalmatians on the ss Mokoia did not appear on the lists at all, but were reported in the news.

The fortunate part of the arrangement was that with two passenger lists it was possible to come up with one reasonable list of passengers, and if both lists were provided to record the most probable version of a Dalmatian name for the sailing.

It was apparent that immigration varied between various parts of Dalmatia over time so an effort was made to assign areas of origin to passenger's names. The areas selected were,

- 1. Northern, mainly Novi but other parts of Istria and the associated islands
- 2. Korcula-Peljesac,
- 3. Southern Coastal, from Igrane to Gradac
- 4. North Coastal, from Drasnice to Split
- 5. Inland, Vrgorac and other inland villages
- 6. Hvar
- 7. Brac
- 8. Neretva, from Rogotin to Gabela

Village origins were taken from Part A of Once Despised, Now Respected by A.Trlin. Surnames originating in multiple areas were left uncoded in the early years, but closer to 1914 were also checked against the List of Jugoslav and Austrian Aliens 1918 reproduced in Appendix B of The Stayers, enabling the origin of many names to be coded to a particular area.

Ages of immigrants were sparsely recorded. However enough records are there to enable an assessment of how ages of the arrivals varied over the period. This is relevant in any review of the importance of fear of conscription as a driver for emigration.

Appendix 4. Ships that Carried Dalmatian Immigrants from Sydney to Auckland from 1892-1914, with Numbers Carried Dates of sailings for passenger vessels between Sydney and Auckland were taken from the "Shipping" section of the "New Zealand Herald" in "Papers Past". Numbers of Dalmatians on sailings were taken from the Family Search webpage used for Appendix 3. Where a vessel sailed but the sailing was not recorded in the Family Search webpage, an estimate was made of Dalmatians on board.

The Family Search webpage is a key document. Dalmatian arrivals in the period account for over 88% of all Austrian arrivals over the period. Most of the remainder would be accounted for in Dalmatians arriving in other New Zealand ports, true Austrians and Hungarians, and other Austrian citizens from the Austro-Hungarian Empire. The webpage needs editing. Individual sailing records are not produced in a consistent fashion. Sailings to Auckland from Sydney can be listed under "Auckland" or "Auckland, Other Ports Listed" for no apparent reason for the difference.

To assist any researcher who wishes to check actual images of any sailing, Appendix 4 has been coded to give the approximate image number for any sailing. Those marked "a" are for "Auckland" and those marked "o" are for "Auckland, Other Ports Listed"; the number is the approximate image number for the sailing.

- Authorise local authorities to issue

Local authority

- (3.) Authorise any specified local authorities whose districts are in whole or in part comprised within a kauri-gum district to issue licenses under this Act.
- 3. Every local authority authorised as aforesaid (hereinafter referred to as "authorised local authority") may issue licenses under this Act as hereinafter provided; but it is hereby expressly declared that such local authority shall not have power to refuse a license to any person possessing any of the qualifications hereinafter provided, except in the case of aliens coming to the colony after the coming into operation of this Act, and in the case of any person disqualified under section twenty-six hereof.

Classes of licenses

- Such licenses shall be of three classes, to wit,-
- (1.) A special kauri-gum-digging license (hereinafter called a "special license");
- (2.) An ordinary kauri-gum-digging license (hereinafter called an "ordinary license"); and
- (3.) A kauri-gum-buyer's license (hereinafter called a "gumbuyer's license").

Kauri-gum reserves.

- 5. With respect to kauri-gum reserves the following provisions shall apply:-
 - (1.) Each reserve shall be situate in the neighbourhood of a village, special, or other settlement, the name or description whereof shall be specified in the Order in Council creating the reserve.
 - (2.) Each reserve shall be available exclusively for kauri-gumdigging, and no person shall be entitled to dig for kaurigum thereon unless-
 - (a.) He is either a member of the settlement specified in the Order in Council creating the reserve or a Native of the Maori race residing in the vicinity of such settlement; nor unless Kauri-gum Industry.

[1898, No. 23.

7. No person shall be entitled to receive or hold an ordinary who may hold license unless he satisfies the authorised local authority to which ordinary licenses. the application therefor is made that he has resided in the colony for not less than three months next preceding the date of the application, or is a British subject by birth or naturalisation.

8. No person shall be entitled to receive or hold a special or Further qualificaordinary license which on its face is expressed to extend to a kauri-tion as to kauri-gum gum reserve unless he satisfies the authorised local authority to which the application therefor is made that, in addition to being qualified under sections six or seven hereof, as the case may be, he also possesses the qualification prescribed by paragraph (a) of subsection two of section five hereof.

9. With respect to every license under this Act, the following Provisions as to form, fee for, and provisions shall apply :-

(1.) It shall be in the prescribed form, and shall not be transferable. (2.) It shall continue in force until the thirty-first day of December next following the date of its issue, but may be renewed from year to year thereafter.

(3.) There shall be payable upon the issue thereof, and upon every annual renewal thereof, a license-fee at the rate of five shillings per year in the case of a special license, and one pound per year in the case of an ordinary license or a gum-buyer's license: Provided that in the case of infirm persons the local body may remit the license-fee.

(4.) The renewal shall in every case be effected by indorsing on the license, under the hand of some person appointed in that behalf by the authorised local authority by which the license was issued, the words "Renewal fee paid, and license renewed for the year ending 31st December, 1."

(5.) In the event of the license being lost or destroyed, the authorised local authority by which it was issued may, on satisfactory proof thereof, and on payment of a fee of one shilling, issue a duplicate with all existing indorsements, and such duplicate with its indorsements shall for all purposes operate in lieu of the original.

10. Subject to the provisions of this Act, every special or Rights conferred ordinary license shall while it continues in force (but no longer) by license entitle the licensee named therein to exercise the following rights in respect of land within any kauri-gum district:-

(1.) To dig for kauri-gum; and also(2.) To take up and personally occupy as a residence or business site any area not exceeding two acres of unoccupied Crown land (other than land comprised in any kauri-gum reserve) upon such terms and conditions as are prescribed by regulations under this Act.

11. Nothing in this Act or in any special or ordinary license Restrictions as to shall operate or be construed to entitle the licensee to dig for kauri- digging on certain

An Acr to place certain Restrictions on Immigration into New Tale. Zealand.

[Reserved for the againtication of Her Majesty's pleasure thereon.]

WHEREAS the Bill intituled "The Asiatic Restriction Act, 1896," Proamble. has not been assented to by Her Majesty, and it is expedient to make other provision for restricting immigration into New Zealand in certain cases:

BE IT THEREFORE ENACTED by the General Assembly of New Zealand in Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same,

1. The Short Title of this Act is "The Immigration Re- Short Title. striction Act, 1899."

2. This Act shall not apply to-

(1.) Any person possessed of and named in a certificate in the form numbered one in the Schedule hereto, signed by the Colonial Secretary, or any officer, whether in or outside of New Zealand, whom the Governor in Council authorises to grant such certificates; nor to

(2.) Any person of a class for whose immigration into New Zealand provision is made by law, or by a scheme approved by the Governor in Council; nor to

(3.) Any person or class of persons exampted from this Act by the Governor in Council; nor to operation of Act.

- (4.) Her Majesty's land and sea forces; nor to
- (5.) The officers and crew of any ship of war of any Government;
- (6.) Any person being one of the officers or crew of any mercantile vessel-provided that he is not discharged in New Zealand, and also that he is on board the vessel when she is cleared outwards, and leaves New Zealand with her:
- (7.) Any person duly accredited to the Government of New Zealand by or under the authority of the Imperial or any other Government.

Persons prohibited from landing in New Zealand.

3. Except in so far as is otherwise provided in the subsequent sections of this Act, it shall not be lawful for any person of any of the following classes (hereinafter called "prohibited immigrant") to land in New Zealand, that is to say :

(1.) Any person other than of British (including Irish) birth and parentage who, when asked so to do by an officer appointed under this Act by the Governor, fails to himself write out and sign, in the presence of such officer, in any European language, an application in the form numbered two in the Schedule hereto, or in such other form as the Colonial Secretary from time to time directs:

Provided that any person dissatisfied with the decision of such officer shall have the right to appeal to the nearest Stipendary Magistrate, who shall make such inquiries as he shall think fit, and his decision thereon shall be final:

(2.) Any idiot or insane person:

(3.) Any person suffering from a contagious disease which is loathsome or dangerous:

(4.) Any person who, not having received a free pardon, has within two years next preceding the date on which he lands been convicted in any country of any offence involving moral turpitude which, if committed in New Zealand, would be punishable by imprisonment for two years or upwards, not being a mere political offence:

Provided that this section shall not apply to shipwrecked persons.

Certain persons may land if deposit made and certificate thereafter obtained.

4. Any person appearing to be a prohibited unmigrant within the meaning of section three of this Act, but not coming within the meaning of subsections two, three, or four of that section, may lawfully land in New Zealand upon the following conditions, that is

(1.) He shall, before landing, deposit with an officer under this Act the sum of one hundred pounds:

(2.) He shall, within the period of fourteen days after landing, obtain from the Colonial Secretary or a Stipendiary Magistrate a certificate that he does not come within the prohibition of this Act :

Deposit forfeited if certificate not pranted

(3.) If within such period he duly obtains such certificate, such deposit shall be returned to him and he shall cease to be subject to this Act, but if not, then by force of this Act 63 VICT.

(1.) He is liable to a penalty of one hundred pounds.

(2.) Irrespective of such penalty, he is also liable to be removed immigrant. from New Zoaland, and, pending such removal, to be detained in prison or other safe custody for any period not exceeding six months:

Provided that upon the aforesaid penalty of one hundred pounds being paid he may at any time be released from detention for the purpose of being removed from New Zealand, or upon his finding two approved sureties, each in the sum of fifty pounds, that he will leave New Zealand within one month.

(3.) The master and owner of the vessel by which he was brought to New Zealand are jointly and severally liable-

(a.) To a penalty of one hundred pounds in respect of each such immigrant; and also

(b.) To defray the expenses incurred by the Government in respect of such immigrant's removal from New Zealand, and of his detention and maintenance in New Zealand pending such removal:

Provided, however, that in the case of a prohibited immigrant within the meaning of subsection three or subsection four of section three hereof no proceedings shall be taken against such master or owner after the expiration of three months from the date of the arrival of such vessel in any New Zealand port.

8. In any case where prohibited immigrants are transhipped Liability where from one vessel to another for the purpose of being brought to New prohibited Zealand, the provisions of this Act shall apply to both such vessels, transhipped. their masters and owners, in like manner as if such immigrants had been brought to New Zealand by both such vessels.

9. No vessel shall be cleared out of any port of New Zealand unless and until all the provisions of this Act relating to such vessel, its master and owner, have been duly complied with, nor until all penalties and other moneys payable by such master or owner have been fully paid, or have been duly secured by bond in manner hereinafter provided.

Vessel may be detained if Act not complied with

10. In any case where the Commissioner of Customs is of opinion that the master or owner of any vessel has committed any offence, or made any default, or is liable for the payment of any penalty or other moneys under this Act, the following special provisions shall apply :-

(1.) The Commissioner may by writing under his hand authorise any person, being an officer of Customs or member of the Police Force, to detain such vessel.

(2.) Such detention may be either at the port or place where such vessel is found, or at any port or place to which the Commissioner orders such vessel to be brought.

(3.) For the purposes of such detention the person authorised to effect the same shall be entitled to obtain in the customary manner such writ of assistance or other aid and assistance in and about the detention of or other lawful dealing with the vessel as would be available in the case of vessels or goods seized under any Act relating to the Customs.

(4.) Such detention shall be for safe custody only, and shall be discontinued if a bond with two sufficient sureties to the satisfaction of the Commissioner is given by the master or owner for the full payment of all penalties and other. moneys then payable, or that may thereafter be adjudged to be payable, under this Act in respect of any such offence, default, or liability (including the costs incurred in and about the detention of the vessel).

In default of payments due under Act vessel may be sold. 11. If default is made by the master or owner of any vessel in paying or in securing by bond as aforesaid the full payment of any penalty or other moneys payable under this Act by such master or owner, then the following provisions shall apply:—

(1.) Such vesset may be seized and sold under the provisions for seizure and sale of vessels or goods contained in any Act relating to the Customs, and for that purpose the provisions of subsection three of the last-preceding section hereof shall, mutatis mutandis, apply.

(2.) The proceeds of such sale shall be applied-first, in payment of the costs incurred in and about the detention, seizure, and sale of the vessel; secondly, in payment of all penalties and other moneys payable under this Act as aforesaid by the master or owner; and the surplus (if any) shall be paid to the owner or other person lawfully entitled thereto.

Court may give time to pay.

12. Upon the conviction of any prohibited immigrant under any of the foregoing provisions of this Act, whereby he is adjudged to pay a sum of money, the Court, if it sees fit, may order that such sum or any part thereof shall be payable at some future day, not 63 VICT.

Appendix 7. Voyaging to New Zealand

To understand the times, numbers and places of origin of the flow of immigrants into New Zealand it was necessary to obtain the best possible information on the passenger lists of ships likely to have brought Dalmatians into New Zealand. The opening of the Suez Canal in 1869 created an opportunity for European shipping lines to offer passages for travellers from Europe generally, but particularly for those living in the Eastern Mediterranean, to travel to Australia and on to New Zealand.

Two major services appear to have dominated this passenger travel. The first major service was a service where by Austrian Lloyd ran vessels from Trieste to Port Said and from 1894, to Alexandria, where passengers transferred to Orient Line vessels running from London to Sydney via Fremantle. The vessels were smart passenger liners carrying both saloon and steerage passengers

The second was the North German Lloyd sailing from Bremen to Sydney via Italian ports, Alexandria and Fremantle from as early as 1877, connecting from Alexandria to Trieste.

The 6000 ton Orient Line liner ss. "Oroya" used on the London to Sydney route from the 1870's to the early 1900's. The author's father travelled to Sydney on this vessel, arriving in February 1904.

The 11000 ton North German Lloyd liner Bremen, a Barbarossa class vessel used on the Bremen to Sydney route from 1898

On its maiden voyage in December 1898 it carried 123 Dalmatians, the most brought on any trans-Tasman yoyage. The photo is part of Collection of postcards, prints and negatives by John Dickie held in the Alexander Turnbull Library Ships, such as the Bremen, were fast passenger liners carrying both saloon and steerage passengers. As WW1 approached vessels were introduced that were secretly armed and could be converted into armed raiders at short notice – and were so when war broke out.

Seegner (the German Consul) and Langguth(the Austrian Consul) were advertising the service through their company "Seegner, Langguth & Co". Langguth as consul actively advocated on behalf of the Dalmatian immigrants until the start of World War 1.

For both lines travellers to New Zealand linked to Sydney-Auckland services provided by either the Union Steamship Co or by Huddart and Parker.

The one way steerage class fare by 1898 appears to have been £26. This cost was stated in Thomas Thatcher's submissions to the Kauri Gum Industry Commission in 1898 (Page 42) and that this sum could be advanced commercially for the fare to be paid back with interest of £6 after 12 months. In his submission to the Commission John McLee Tynan (Page 43) advised that he had made many remissions of £32 to Dalmatia on behalf of Dalmatians, but never more than once for the same person, which appears to confirm Thatcher's submission.

However most fares to New Zealand were paid by way of advances from family, from villages or arranged through the local church.

An assumption was made in writing this book, that Dalmatian immigrants would use these shipping services and would travel steerage class. These assumptions proved to be reasonable. The numbers measured using these assumptions was about 88 % of the total Austrian immigrants in the period 1896 to 1916. True Austrians, other subjects of the Austro-Hungarian empire and Dalmatians who migrated to other areas of New Zealand would be part, possibly nearly all, of the remaining 12%. Although no specific search was made for Dalmatians travelling saloon class, many pages of passenger lists were untitled so many saloon lists were viewed. Only 4 Dalmatians travelling Saloon class were noted from this scrutiny.

The son of a Dalmatian gumdigger, the author graduated as a civil engineer from the University of Auckland. After a career in the construction industry followed by a period as a consulting engineer he has spent his semi-retirement researching and writing on genealogical and historic topics.

The book is a companion book to "The Stayers". It provides the background for those Dalmatians who came to New Zealand for a short term stay to earn money prior to World War 1. These Transients far outnumbered those who came to settle long term. A rational explanation is given for the issues that drove emigration to New Zealand from 1892 to 1914. Included data are passenger lists for over 3700 readable Dalmatian names and a record of over 1300 Dalmatians naturalized prior to 1916.
